CAMEC La Spezia 11.Th. November 2017

Award handed over to

Loredana Otranto

For her research in a particularly delicate field of great current relevance, and her commitment to accompany women victims of abuse, to emerge from the loneliness that grips their hearts in a vice We dedicate a Pattyrose' poem

I told you so, soul, that you would be rewarded because life takes one verse and then another presents itself and around the edges of a sunset that seemed to be dyed black you look now a sky streaked with gold and amaranth.

After all, soul, what did you think would ever happen to you?
Perhaps the tip on tiptoe had bordered on, striking,
with his fists closed what looked like a mocking destiny.

In the hour that is night and then day and then again night you found the seed of revenge carved in your heart that too had suffered closed in a corner of pain.

I told you so, soul, destiny lives on you, with those who love you and there is no storm [the clouds are preparing for no return] and there is no hurricane [too crazy the race that drives her away] only the time, only the time, to still live in a pink dawn.
